

April 15, 2018

Ashley Reese
Staff Writer
Jezebel
ashbrookreese@gmail.com

Dear Ms. Reese,

Alexus Brown wrote a poem titled, "Irregular Periods." In this poem it discusses what it means to be told your body isn't working properly without explanation from doctors. She came to the conclusion that this was her new normal.

I came across an article you wrote on The Gloss, titled "Accidental Virgin: Have You Ever Left a Period Stain on Your Boyfriend's Belongings?" I was researching how to remove stains out of sheets (for a totally unrelated reason) and your article came up on Google's related search. Your honesty is what makes this so relatable.

Like you, Alexis Brown displayed her honesty by discussing a natural situation that would be considered taboo. In her poem, she goes into detail about an event that took place in her life that many women have most likely encountered. Your audience may also relate to her literary content as well.

Best Regards,

Katasha Brown
Media Relations